Our cover kid for The Blue Shirt of 1951-52 is Don (Bones) Raleigh. On the left he is depicted in valiant effort to split Boston defense. Insert mirrored around shape of a puck shows Raleigh holding the West Side Association trophy, presented to him on the final night of last season. It is emblematic of the most valuable Ranger in the regular campaign by vote of the New York Hockey Writers Association. Raleigh, a hustling crowd-pleaser, finished in a tie with Reggie Sinclair for the team's scoring leadership.

'SUPERMAN' SLOWINSKI HITS A ROAD BLOCK

First 25 Years The Hardest?

WHEN you look back on the first 25 years of Ranger triumph and travail, you don't know whether to laugh or to cry, to be proud or cynical. There were great years and bad years. Three times they finished first in the regular run for the playoffs. Three other times they pushed through to Stanley cup playoff championships.

The history of the Blue Shirts can best be described in four parts. There were the original Rangers who crashed the playoffs the first nine years of their existence. Great men in that crowd. Lester Patrick . . . Frank Boucher . . . Bill Cook . . . Ching Johnson . . . Taffy Abel . . . Murray Murdoch. Almost overnight they built big league hockey in Our Town into a major sport.

Then came the farm system movement, the replacements of old parts. Davey Kerr moved into goal. The well-balanced team appeared with three high-scoring lines, centered by Neil Colville, Phil Watson and Clint Smith. They perpetuated the glory years of the past.

The war hit the Rangers hard. Almost symbolic was the death in action of a personable and bright kid prospect named Dudley (Red) Garrett. For four straight years, starting with 1942-43, the Blue Shirts struggled unsuccessfully to climb out of the league depths. They were outmanned, outclassed. The Old Pros were off to war.

The end of the cataclysm found vets mingling with kids, none sure of his place in NHL society. Under the able direction of general manager Frank Boucher, a complete upheaval took place and the Blue Shirts hit the upgrade. In 1946-47 they emerged from the cellar. The next year they were in the playoffs. In 1949-50 they stunned the hockey world by battling to within one goal of a Stanley Cup title.

Disillusionment cast its dark shadow over the silver anniversary year. Off to a slow, shaky start, the Rangers of 1950-51 won but one game of its first 17. Even a spellbinder and psychiatrist, Dr. David F. Tracy, could not bring the Blue Shirts out of their slump in a one-game trial.

On December 7, Boucher announced he would offer his resignation if the Rangers failed to reach the playoffs. At the time they were solidly entrenched in last place, eight points out of fourth.

This bold message roused the Rangers into a potent bid for recognition. In the space of a month they won seven games, lost two, tied three. They climbed from last to third. The NHL marveled at their recuperative powers, and some wondered out loud how much real aid was supplied by restaurateur Gene Leone's diet prescription and mysterious elixir which the team sipped out of a black bottle.

These were exciting days and the Rangers reveled in them. But the physical toll of key injuries caused a disastrous letdown. Edgar Laprade, star center, suffered a fracture of the left ankle with half the season to go. Goalie Chuck Rayner was constantly bedeviled by cuts and bruises and rheumatic pains. The team's leading goal-getter, Nick Mickoski, suffered a shoulder dislocation.

Thus the first 25 years ended on a dismal note, with the Rangers eliminated from playoff contention on the next to last game of the season. Boucher's offer to resign was rejected. The club's loyal following looked forward to next year, and changes were in the works.

Backed by Gen. John Reed Kilpatrick, president of Madison Square Garden, Boucher went into the market and acquired three outstanding prospects in Wally Hergesheimer, Hymie Buller and Steve Kraftcheck. He traded Tony Leswick to Detroit for Gaye Stewart and then acquired Paul Ronty from Boston for Gus Kyle, rights to Pentti Lund and cash.

Another epoch begins. Will hope turn to fulfillment?

Neil Colville goes into his second year as Ranger coach, fourth to hold the title. Neil centered his first Ranger farm club in the Eastern League and for years pivoted a topnotch line with brother Mac and Alex Shibicky on the wings. After serving in the Canadian Army and RCAF, he rejoined the Rangers as a defenseman. Twice he made second-team all-stars at center, once on the backline. He coached New Haven before moving back to the NHL. He is a silent sufferer when things look dark, which isn't the reason for his snow-white thatch. He was prematurely gray when he first reached New York. A bachelor at 37, he shares proprietorship of a 1,000-acre wheat farm with Shibicky in Winnipeg.

Hy Buller gets his second whirl in the NHL as a seasoned youngster of 25. An all-around athlete who grew up in Saskatoon, he was with the Rovers as a 16-year-old. Next year he was claimed by Detroit, played briefly for them in two war seasons. Then followed six full years in the AHL in which he was regarded as a stickout defenseman, scoring 57 points in 66 games as Cleveland's take-charge guy last season. Of Jewish descent (Rangers had two others in Alex Levinsky and Max Labovitch) he is married to a Harrisburg girl. They have two sons. He works as a sporting goods salesman in Cleveland in the off-season.

Frank Eddolls was appointed team captain last season. A reliable defenseman who makes an art of position play, he lacks the bulk of the average backliner but offsets it with clever use of his stick. He turned pro with Hershey in 1941, then served with the RCAF, and joined the Canadiens in '44. After shuttling between Montreal and Buffalo for several seasons, he joined the Rangers in '47 with Buddy O'Connor in one of the best deals in New York history. Married, father of one girl.

Jack Evans, his rookie year behind him, seems ready to step out as one of the hardest hitting defensemen in the NHL. His rock-'em, sock-'em tactics ignited the Rangers' mid-season spurt after he had been recalled in mid-November. A lantern-jawed product of the Western prairies, Jack was born in Garant, South Wales, and couldn't speak a word of English when he entered school in Drumheller, Alberta. He played for Lethbridge and the Rovers before turning pro. His father is a fire boss in a Drumheller coal mine, but Jack spends the off-season driving a brewery truck. It is the belief of the Ranger brain trust that he will develop into one of the league's outstanding defensemen as soon as he cures himself of a predilection for attracting penalties. He's married, the quiet type, but an entertaining yodeler at get-togethers. Some of his teammates call him Cowboy.

Emile Francis, called the Cat because of his nimble grace in the nets, has made some notable emergency performances for the Rangers. Called up hurriedly from Cincinnati one night last season, he reported half way through a game with Montreal. Chuck Rayner suffered through the first two periods with a painful injury, finally gave way to Francis who shut out Montreal under heavy pressure for 20 minutes. For a little man Francis possesses a fine hand and picks off sizzling drives with the aplomb of a first baseman. He was regular goalie for the Black Hawks in 1947-48, then became Ranger property with Alex Kaleta in a deal that sent Jim Henry to Chicago. After the 1950-51 season ended Francis was operated on his left shoulder to prevent a recurrence of repeated dislocations. Likes to jabber away at his teammates when the action gets hot around his nets. He spent the summer playing and managing a baseball team which barnstormed through Canada. He's single.

Ed Harrison made the jump from junior hockey to the Bruins in one fell swoop, coming up with the more highly touted Ed Sandford, his cousin. Never better than a utility player with Boston, Harrison showed well as an opportunist in his sporadic chances. Last Nov. 16, he was acquired by the Rangers with Zellio Toppazzini in a two-for-one swap for Dunc Fisher. Sent down to Hershey, he was slowed by injuries, but managed to achieve the hat trick one night with his left arm in a cast. Then, to prove that he could be dangerous even when healthy, he plunked in four goals on a subsequent night. Slender and swift, Harrison has played the wings through most of his pro career, but prefers center ice. Could be a handy man to call up in the event of a pinch on the forward lines. He's married, father of a girl.

Wally Hergesheimer, a heads-up little guy, joins the Rangers after a record-breaking rookie year in the AHL. He lit the red lamp 42 times in 71 games, also accumulating 41 assists for Cleveland. Then, in the playoffs, he set a new all-time record with 11 goals in 11 games as the Barons asserted their dominance. Wally has made a methodical climb up the hockey ladder, going from Brandon Elks to pro teams in Minneapolis, San Francisco, Minneapolis again and Cleveland. Seven years ago he lost the first two fingers of his right hand at the knuckles and damaged a third in a factory punch press accident. But obviously the mishap did nothing to rob him of his shooting ability. His brother, Phil, was a former big leaguer and for years made life miserable for goalies in the AHL. Wally is a well-liked youngster who enhances his popularity by giving complete credit to those who helped him move up toward the top—his former coaches Les Cunningham and Bill and Bun Cook, to his brother and to his center mate in Cleveland, Fred Thurier. He's single.

Vic Howe, kid brother of Detroit's NHL scoring champ, was happily esconced in the Red Wing farm system, contemplating the day when he might team up on the same line with Gordie, when the Rangers discovered he had been quietly dropped off Detroit's negotiation list. So they claimed him. After one season with the Windsor Spitfires he joined the Rovers and impressed sideliners as a youngster who will go all the way. Still with the Rovers, he's subject to immediate recall. Vic is big and strong, bears a strong resemblance to Gordie on and off the ice. He had a three-game trial last season with the Rangers, scoring his maiden big league goal in the final game. Whatever became of the player who was placed on Detroit's list in favor of Vic? His name is Al Van Bellingham and Vic has lost track of him. Howe plays a lot of baseball, shoots golf in the 70s. He's single.

Steve Kraftcheck thinks the biggest break of his career happened when the Bruins farmed him out in mid-season of last year to Indianapolis. For under the painstaking tutelage of coach Ott Heller, former Ranger defenseman, Steve picked up so many valuable tips in the art of backline play that when he was recalled by Boston in time for the playoffs, he stood out in the post-season games with Toronto. Frank Boucher, a spectator at the playoffs, interested himself in Steve and purchased him from the Bruins. Eddie Shore, Boston's immortal all-time defenseman, was also taking in that series, and it still puzzles him how the Rangers were able to talk the Bruins out of the young man. Kraftcheck is a low-slung husky who hits hard, likes the going rough. His development is not yet complete, but his ruggedness and aptitude make him a potential star. He's married, works as a welder in the off-season.

Ed Kullman is blond, squat and scrappy. Twice he has been acquired by the Rangers. He was given up reluctantly the first time to Providence in the $70,000 deal for Allen Stanley in December of '48, then reacquired in the summer of 1950 for two nondescript defensemen. A righthanded shot, he is equally at home on either wing, has the faculty of getting shots off from any position and is known to the trade as a two-way man. That is, he can backcheck, too. For a time he was the Rangers leading scorer last season, but fell off the pace when Edgar Laprade was lost to the team. Credits his backchecking hustle to a former junior coach out of Winnipeg, Joe Rivers. This ice savant stressed the importance of covering one's check. A veteran of three years in the RCAF, Eddie is married and No. 1 father on the team with four children—the youngest, twin girls. Operates a garage service business in the off-season in Winnipeg.

Edgar Laprade belongs with the top-ranking centers of the post-war era. A slick stylist and tireless worker, he won the Calder Trophy in 1945-46 and the Lady Byng the next. Does more to control the puck than anybody else you could name. Half way through last season he rammed into the boards in center ice with only two seconds of a game to go, suffered a compound fracture of the left fibula bone and missed the remainder of the campaign. In his absence Tony Leswick, now with Detroit, went 27 straight games without a goal, underlining Eager Edgar's value. At the time of his injury the Rangers were unbeaten in 13 of 17 starts. His penalty killing is so artistic that once, while the Rangers were shorthanded, he clicked for two goals in a space of 48 seconds. It is Frank Boucher's opinion that Laprade makes more scoring chances for himself than any other player in the NHL. Edgar lives in Port Arthur, Ont., operates a hotel in the off-season. He is married, has three daughters.

Jack McLeod rates as the hard luck kid of the team. He joined the Rangers half-way through the 1949-50 season, direct from junior ranks in Moose Jaw, with a record of having survived an attack of polio at the age of seven and a fractured vertebra playing football in school. He had hardly tasted his first cup of coffee as a big leaguer when he suffered a broken nose in practice. Last season he was put on the shelf for 10 weeks with a broken collarbone, then came down with an appendicitis attack that necessitated an operation last August. A clever stickhandler at center and wing, he is still regarded as an outstanding prospect whose airplane excursions (he's a licensed pilot) give the management the heebie-jeebies. Jack is married, plays a lot of baseball in the prairie provinces in the summer.

Nick Mickoski, only 20-goal scorer on the team last year, seems headed for the hockey heights. Big, strong and fast, he has a wicked backhand slap shot and can bulldoze his way through a brick wall when he's right. Enjoyed the biggest night of his career last Xmas Eve when he poured in four goals after setting up the first in a 6-1 victory over Chicago. Twice in the last two seasons he was retarded by dislocations of the right shoulder. An operation to correct this disability was performed on Nick soon after the season ended, and after a summer of golf, he feels better than ever. Nick came up through the Ranger chain, from the New York Rovers to the New Haven Ramblers to the NHL. In addition to hockey, he played football, baseball and basketball during his school years in Winnipeg. Of Ukranian descent, he celebrated his 23rd birthday on Pearl Harbor Day. He's single.

Don Raleigh, glib, skeletonized center, known to the trade as an upper class money player ever since the playoffs of 1950, during which he scored the sudden-death goal in two successive games of the final series. "Bones" to his mates, he had one brief whirl with the Rangers in 1943-44, at 17, then returned after two years at the University of Manitoba and one in the Army. His strong finish last season (he scored the hat trick plus an assist in a key game with the Canadiens which ended in a disappointing 5-5 tie) earned him the West Side Association trophy as the year's most valuable Ranger. He holds the NHL record for the fastest three assists—in 81 seconds. Has one four-goal night and three hat tricks. Off-the-ice interests include music, books, Civil War history, geometry and the gals. Once he drove all the way from Western Canada to the Southern battlefields of the Civil War in order to get some first-hand experience on how it feels to sleep on the historic sod. He's single.

Chuck Rayner, the league's MVP two seasons ago, was not quite so effective last season. But no other goalie took half the beating Chuck did. Six different times he was cut across the face or scalp and had to be stitched up. Once he was hit in the jaw by a screen shot, losing three teeth. Another time it was his knee, again a pulled abdominal muscle that caused him to wear a girdle. Finally, in March, with the Rangers favored for a playoff spot, he suffered a bursitis condition of the left shoulder that damaged the team's chances. He broke into the NHL with the old Americans in 1940-41, a Red Dutton discovery, and the Rangers grabbed him when he returned from three years in the Canadian Navy. For a time he alternated with Sugar Jim Henry, his partner in a fishing and hunting lodge in Kenora, Ont., finally winning out as full-time regular. In each of the last two seasons, Chuck picked up a $500 NHL bonus as second All-Star goalie. It was his opinion that the crease in front of the nets was not sufficiently deep or wide. The league obliged by extending the area in front of the nets. Married to the sister of ex-Ranger Charley Mason, father of a girl.

Paul Ronty came to the Rangers this season from Boston in a deal which sent defenseman Gus Kyle to Boston, plus cash and a priority in the purchase of Pentti Lund of Cleveland. Tall, blond, of Finnish descent, Ronty was grabbed out of Toronto midget ranks by Bruins' scout Hal Cotton. When he moved up the ranks from the Boston Olympics to Hershey to the Bruins, his coaches called him a Bill Cowley with speed. In Boston, he centered the No. 1 line, sometimes called the Pony Line, for two seasons, scoring 20 goals and 29 assists in 60 games his first full year, 23 goals and 36 assists in 70 games the next. Slumped off in his third year and expressed sincere happiness at the change of scenery that brings him to the Garden. A rabid baseball fan and Red Sox rooter, he calls Johnny Pesky his favorite player. Will doubtless switch to Dark, Rizzuto or Reese in New York. He's married, father of a boy.

Jim Ross, the biggest man on the squad, also regarded as the sleeper. He comes out of the same Quebec Senior League which produced Reggie Sinclair, and made the second all-star team at defense there. This was his second appearance in the Rangers' training camp, and this time Frank Boucher believes he is ready for the NHL. He was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, home of Haig & Haig, and played his first hockey in Toronto at the age of 11. He went to De La Salle College in Toronto, where Max Quackenbush of Chicago was one of his team mates. He returned to Scotland at the age of 20 for a year of intermediate hockey, then spent the next two in senior amateur hockey in Detroit. He was so impressive at fall training that observers called him a cross between Frank Eddolls and Gus Kyle because he not only employs a deft stick but can be as rough as a cocoanut shell when the occasion demands. He is an accountant in the off-season, single, and plays plenty of golf in his spare hours.

Reggie Sinclair came up unheralded last season out of Sherbrooke in the Quebec Senior League and wound up as the top scoring rookie in the NHL. His 39 points put him in joint ownership of lead on the Rangers. A youngster of unusual determination and aggressiveness, Reggie is equally effective at either wing, though a righthanded shot. Played hockey four seasons at McGill University, but sum total was under 50 games. This, after two seasons lost through RCAF service as a pilot, retarded his progress, but he feels indebted to coach Dave Campbell of McGill for teaching him the rudiments. Campbell also sent up two McGill team mates, Johnny Peirson and Jack Gelineau of Boston. Last summer Sinclair, a quiet, intelligent person, surprised everybody by landing a job as a disk jockey in Sherbrooke. As a rookie he proved pretty convincingly that the Bruins made a mistake in rejecting him as a prospect when he reported to their training camp two years ago. He's married.

Ed Slowinski, reporting to camp a trim 189 pounds, 18 less than a year ago, is confident he'll make this his most prolific scoring season in the NHL. If only for Pamela Ann, his baby daughter who arrived in the summer. The Rangers are equally hopeful for Ed if he can stay mad long enough. The big guy always has had the physical and mechanical equipment as one of the loop's largest forwards. He joined the Blue Shirts after two seasons with the Ottawa Senators, but injuries and excess weight delayed his big league start. He was shipped to New Haven, then to St. Paul before getting in a full season with the Rangers in 1949-50 when he scored 14 goals and 23 assists. Married a New York girl.

Allan Stanley, one of the league's high-ranking defensemen, came up in a blare of trumpets and a glare of publicity. That was in December, 1948, from Providence, in one of the biggest deals ever made for a minor league player—a $70,000 deal, it was called. He proved he belonged just as soon as he stepped out in a Ranger suit. Not a showy player, he makes all the plays and makes 'em look easy. His seven goals last season were topped by only one other defenseman, Red Kelly. He played two and a half seasons with the Boston Olympics in the Eastern League, property of the Bruins, before turning pro early in the 1946-47 season. Son of a fire chief in Timmins, Ont. He's single.

Gaye Stewart, acquired from Detroit in a straight swap for Tony Leswick, has averaged 24 goals in seven previous NHL seasons with three different clubs. The Rangers haven't had a player who could put 'em in at that rate since Bryan Hextall's pre-war years. Stewart's best season was in 1945-46, after two years in the Canadian Navy, he lit the red lamp 37 times in 50 games for Toronto—a goal-getting record for a Maple Leaf player. Could register only 18 goals in his only Red Wing campaign last year, but a broken thumb in a brush with Leswick, of all people, set him back. He won the Calder trophy in his rookie year, 1942-43, made the all-star team three years later. He's married, has one boy.

Zellio Toppazzini joined the Rangers in his 21st year, traded in mid-season of the past campaign with Ed Harrison for Dunc Fisher of Boston, and if he didn't come of age as a hockey player he showed plenty of promise. He scored 14 goals, added 14 assists; Fisher had nine goals, 20 assists. The Topper has the size, the skating ability and an intangible opportunism around the nets. An affable, wide-eyed youngster from the nickel-mining town of Copper Cliff, Ont., Toppazzini was signed by Boston scout Cooney Weiland, went from junior hockey to the pros. He shuttled between Hershey and Boston before being traded. Got married in the off-season.

Fans Honor Boucher

Bill, Frank and Bun

On the memorable night of Feb. 14, 1951, Ranger fans turned out to honor 49-year-old Frank Boucher, 25 years a Ranger as player, coach and manager, for his impressive contributions to the game of hockey.

Tributes were paid by Mayor Vincent R. Impellitteri and former U. S. postmaster-general James A. Farley, chief speakers on the occasion of Boucher's silver anniversary year.

The Mayor presented Boucher with a black Studebaker sedan on behalf of the fans, and Mr. Farley gave him a portfolio of letters from sports figures all over the continent "as a daily reminder of the affection they have and will have for you during your lifetime."

Other gifts included a typewriter from the New York Hockey Writers Association, a television set from the Rangers, a silver set from the Rovers, an oil burner from hometown friends in Mountain, Ont., and others too numerous to mention. Jim Hausman was chairman of the committee.

Of particular interest was the reunion of Boucher and the Cook brothers, Bill and Bun. Together they formed hockey's "first" line—tops for all time. During their titanic tour of NHL duty they scored 522 goals and 510 assists, exclusive of playoffs. Bun Cook now coaches Cleveland, Bill has a similar capacity in Saskatoon.

When these Three Musketeers posed all over again for pictures, Frank said: "As usual, I'm in the middle—in more ways than one."

The nicest gift came later. The Rangers walloped the Chicago Black Hawks, 5-1.

The Cincinnati Mohawks started the 1950-51 season under a full head of steam that saw them in first and second place until the end of November when they began a gradual descent to the cellar of the Western Division of the American Hockey League where they finished the season.

Queen City dopesters have several reasons for the slump. One line of thought blamed it on the defensive type game they played. Another reason put forth is that the series of injuries that hit the Hawks near the end of the season is all that kept them from making the playoffs.

Cincinnati won 28 games, tied 8 and lost 34 under the leadership of coach King Clancy who is now the Pittsburgh Hornet's mentor. They scored 203 goals and had 228 goals scored against them.

Through the working agreement with the New York Rangers Cincinnati fans are looking forward to a winning team this season. The Rangers have promised several youngsters who should make a big difference. In addition to the new talent Ranger family members Emile Francis, Johnny Denis and Jack Lancien will be back with the Hawks along with three of the Mohawks' own favorites: Ivan Irwin, Claude Robert and Paul Bibeault.

With a good nucleus coach Clint Smith should do well in his first campaign at the helm of Cincinnati.

If Saskatoon Quakers, now in the Pacific Coast Professional Hockey League, can do as well this year as they did while operating in the Western Canada Senior League last year there shouldn't be many kicks.

Always well placed in the 1950-51 W.C.S.H.L. race, the Quakers reached their peak at playoff time and breezed through the round-robin playoff against Calgary Stampeders and Edmonton Flyers to win the western championship. They were taken out in the Canadian semi-finals by the Toronto St. Mike's, but their followers were thoroughly satisfied with the triumph against Calgary and Edmonton, who had been grinding Saskatoon into the ice for some years.

Going into professional company the Saskatoon team personnel will be changed considerably, but some of the players of last year will be retained by coach Bill Cook, the old Ranger who rates with the greatest right wings ever to lace on a skate.

Cook made his professional hockey debut in Saskatoon 'way back in the 20's and his return as coach of the current team has created a great deal of interest. With him when he played for the old Saskatoon Sheiks were such other noted stars as his brother Bun, the late George Hainsworth, Newsy Lalonde, Harry Cameron and Leo Reise.

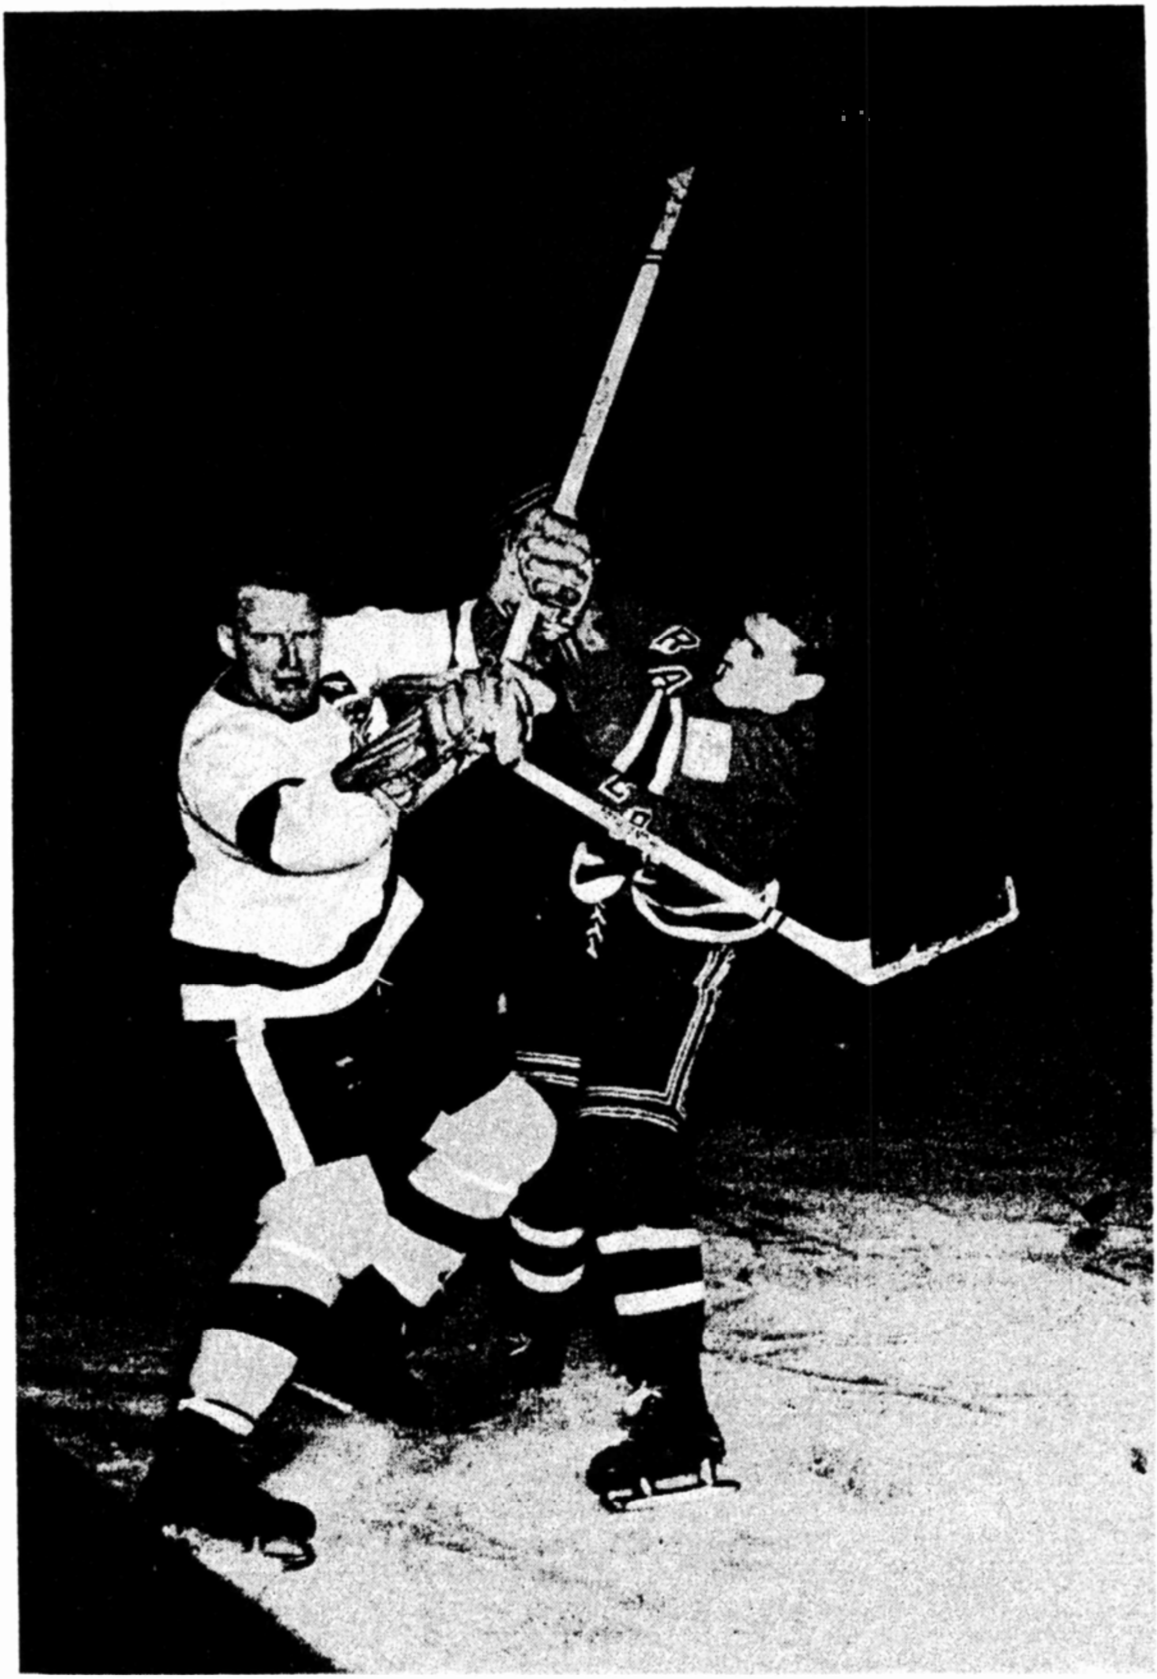
Although the New York Rovers finished last in the Eastern Amateur Hockey League last season they were far from disgraced since only two points separated them from the top club. The final standings showed Johnstown and Boston with 55 points while the Rovers and Atlantic City had 53 points. The race was so close that the goals scored made the Jets the winner over the Olympics while the Sea Gulls edged out the Red Shirts for third place in the same manner.

The offensive leader of the Rovers last season was little Bill Wylie, now with the Cincinnati Mohawks, who racked up 58 points on 23 goals and 35 assists. Right behind him came Bob Manson with 46 points on 23 goals and 23 assists despite the fact he was hampered by injuries all season. Other key men in the Rover picture were Vic Howe and Bill Kyle both with Saskatoon now, Art Stone, Leroy Hyssop, Dick Kotanen and Dom Maglio.

The league goal tending honors went to Dennis Mooney of the Red Shirts. He posted an average of 3.20 in the nets and turned in one shutout.

This season the Rovers as well as the EAHL have been revamped. The league has grown from four to eight teams with Washington, Philadelphia, Springfield and New Haven the new additions. As for the Rovers only three of last year's squad have returned. Among the departed is Phil Watson, last year's Red Shirt coach. In his place Tom Lockhart has engaged Lloyd Ailsby in a player-coach capacity. Ailsby will be remembered by Rover fans as a former Red Shirt player. He plays defense and forward and has been a member of the Ranger organization for eleven years playing with Philadelphia, New Haven, St. Paul and the Rovers.

CLASH OF THE TITANS



Leo Reise, Detroit's big defenseman, seems none too happy about this tangle with Allan Stanley of the Rangers. Allan blocked his path as puck, right, skids harmlessly out of reach.

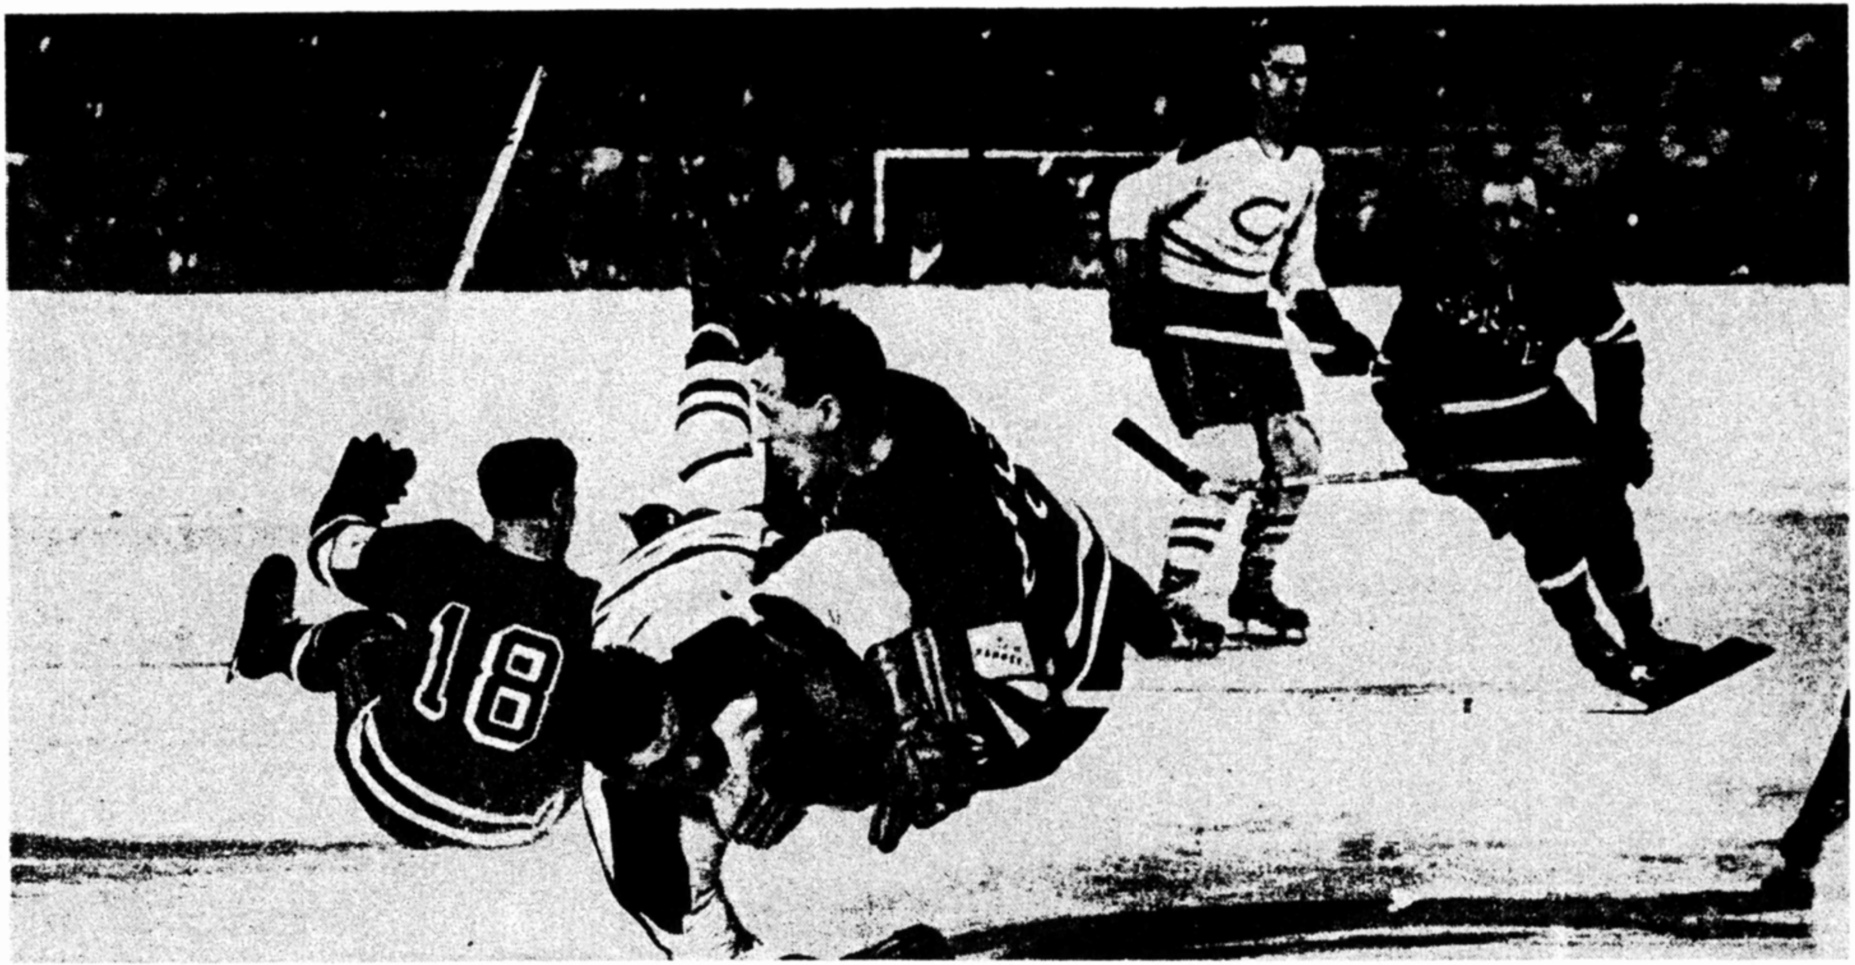
THE ROCKET FIZZLES OUT ON THIS RUSH



Maurice Richard, spectacular right wing of the Montreal Canadiens and top sniper against the Rangers in 1950-51 with 11 goals, hits the deck as ex-Ranger Gus Kyle crashes into him. That's another ex-Ranger, Tony Leswick, missing a shot at Richard. Rangers' Eddie Kullman is on right.

A Fan Club Is Formed

In December, 1950, Frank Boucher conceived the idea of bringing the Rangers closer to the fans, and vice versa. He had a letter distributed through the upper regions of the Garden one night, to which was attached a card so that one could signify his intention of joining a Ranger Fan Club.

About 200 letters were passed out. More than 200 names came back. Before the season had ended, patrons from all sections of the Garden flocked to this ice hockey forum and swelled club membership to over 400.

What Boucher proposed to do was this: Have the fans meet the players. Exhibit interesting hockey films. Furnish fans with a regular news letter on the Rangers and the league in general. Listen to gripes and take action on them.

There were no strings, in fact, no dues, and before the year had ended this loyal and enthusiastic group of Ranger fans organized a trip to Boston and rooted the team into a tie with the Bruins.

Boston Garden never before had resounded to such shrill cheers for the visiting team. Nor had Boston Garden ever seen so many banners draping its facades—bedecked with names of opposing players!

At the first scheduled meeting of the club, on Jan. 15, 1951, all members of the team with but two exceptions appeared. Fans tossed all kinds of questions at the players. The playoff films of the season previous were shown. It was an intimate, informal get-together in the Garden's inner sanctum.

At subsequent conventions the fans met with officials, and got a more sympathetic approach to the problem of the referee. Boucher attended the meetings regularly and endeared himself to the fans by his frank admissions and outspoken views on all matters.

An election of officers was held, and the following were appointed: Herb Goren, president; James McKiel, vice-president; Janet Henne, secretary-treasurer; John Scipione, Mike Kamelis, Paul Halberg, executive committee.
